Not so long ago, a great man Martin Luther King stood in front of the Lincoln statue at Lincoln Memorial. Expressing his own dream to thousands about a matter that was for the sake of a great nation. Well, I too have a dream. Maugre of its possibility, I too have a dream that is greater than of kings. I too, seek for the sake of not just a country but the whole world. I have a dream that this sphere we call home would be a place not as dangerous as it is.

If there is one thing that I have learned from history is that us, humans are creatures of violence, greed, and arrogance. But more important I learned from the same history that us humans, tend to get worse and rakishly as we get to know and learn more. Let us take a look around us. Our wars may have a different face today than yesterday did, but they are far more deadly than ever. Our waste no longer hurts us only but hurts every living thing on this globe as a whole. Our understanding has advanced more than our parents did, but we have lost love and dignity. Our words are connected together no matter the distance, but our hearts have been separated no matter the relation. I say with great sorrow, that predators and wild animals are now better creatures of God than we are. Today, all of us are hurting the mockingbirds without even realizing.

Albert Einstein once said "the world is evil not because of those who do evil, but because of those who look on and do nothing." we all have a part in making this world a place to live in. We all share a responsibility for our own to mother earth. Let's not only make this place for us but rather a livable place for our children to live in.
