introduction of the principles and the systems of democracy into a country, institution, or any system. The democratization had been linked to the restructuring and transition of the committee regimes of one country from facilitate authoritarian political systems into democratic or semi democratic systems. Democratization process always seeks to ensure the protection of the right of the people, as well as the reduction of the threats of the suppressive regimes. The decentralization process is considered to be based on the redistribution of the governmental functions and powers from the top government to the local councils. The governmental decentralization can be recognized in providing lower-level government higher capabilities and authorities for the formulation of political, administrative, environmental, or economic decisions and public policies (Faguet, 2011). The main two types of democratic systems are considered to be the presidential and the parliamentary systems. Within the presidential system the heads of the executive authority will be the head of the government, while in the parliamentary system, the parliaments will be controlling the entire governments, while the head of the executive authority would be getting his authority and legitimacy from the parliaments (SZILÁGYI, 2009).

Democratization and decentralization of the United Kingdom

However the establishment of the parliament of England goes back to the year of 1641, which had been established under the name of the house of the Lord, the first semi democratic parliaments had been established in the year of 1265 in which loads and elected commons had been incorporating departments. However, the democratization of the United Kingdom started in the year of 1850 to the year of 1928, where’s the parliaments formulated various actions and regulations for the Conclusion

Throughout the analysis of the democratization and decentralization processes in the United Kingdom, it can be realized that the decentralization of the government’s became the initial source of the democratization ideology. For instance the formulation of the parliament started before the application of the democratization process, which is provided the parliaments huge abilities and control over the state. The democratization process would never been started, if there had been centralization of authority and power in controlled by the Queen of England. In addition, the success of the United Kingdom Parliament to apply that decentralization process led to the success of democratization process.

For Egypt’s democratization, they should be focusing on the different strategies. Firstly, the high level of centralization within the government would be limiting the ability of the people to elect and choose their representatives who would be managing local regions and units. In other words, the ability of the central government to appoint the governors for all of the 29 governorates from military and police departments would be ensuring that the governors would not be representing the interests of the people. Instead, the Egyptians should be able to elect their own representatives. Secondly, there should be successful transmission from presidential system to parliamentary system, which would be providing the parliament huge powers over the reformulation and decentralization of the entire government. Moving toward a parliamentary system will be ensuring the successfulness of the decentralization and democratization process in Egypt, as well as providing the Egyptians higher levels of social justice fairness in the distribution of resources, as well as higher quality of public services. Thirdly, the Islamic