• Instead of dealing primarily with biological factors, considering psychological and social factors as well will enable understanding of the process of mental disorders.
• Psychological factors: personality, cognitive style, social skills and diagnosis.
• Biological factors: brain structure, neurochemistry, hormones and autonomic nervous system functions.
• Social factors: marital adjustment, family functioning, peer relationships, work and school satisfaction.