Gender Bias: research reports that men more than women have a desire for variety of sexual partners and a greater willingness for casual sex, men couldn’t have evolved this desire in the absence of females. When a man has sex with a willing partner, women is also having sex with a new partner. Despite short-term mating carries considerable potential cost to women, there must also be some benefits. Greiling and Buss suggests that she could profit in a number of ways, way of leaving a poor-quality relationship, to produce more genetically diverse offspring.

Reductionist: Heterosexual biased

Dunbar – study of personal adverts, Dunbar found heterosexual women three times likely to look for resources and status than lesbians were. Homosexual men offered resources about half as often as heterosexual men.
