looks differently. Many of the older people related to these jokes and laughed really hard because they related to what he was speaking about.

The speaker then went on to talk about things many of us did as kids which many of us could relate to as well. He spoke of things like the games many of us played as kids, the way we thought, and plenty of the odd habits we had. Many of these personal experiences the speaker mentioned related to the audience because they had experienced these things too and could relate to these things that were being spoken of.

The speaker used many different devices in order to relate to the audience and provide an enjoyable experience. He used many various stories and examples of things that people found funny and could relate to. He also did other things such as change the tone of his voice, alter his posture, and use certain body movements in order to deliver his self a certain way.

Paulisol’s goal was to entertain people and make them laugh. He used jokes, examples, stories and more to make people laugh and smile. Through his delivery he was very successful in achieving his goals. His use of altering his voice, posture, and hand gestures really helped him to convey what he was feeling and it was amusing to watch. He knew how to say the right thing the right way that made people laugh and have a great time. Through providing laughs and a great time the speaker did indeed reach his goal.

My reaction to this speech was that I was elated. I was glad to have been at a live show and here a stand-up comedian speaks in person. I have seen stand-up comedians recorded plenty of times and plenty of comedy movies which I do likewise enjoy. However seeing someone perform in person only a few feet away was a very different kind of experience which I greatly enjoyed. It was so much fun being part of the live audience and getting to see jokes performed in
