Social change through minority influence is very gradual and rather than causing social change it creates the potential or conditions for change.

Being perceived as deviant may limit the influence of minorities as members of majority groups do not want to be seen as deviant themselves.

Social norms interventions have shown to lead to the opposite effect e.g. campaigns to reduce energy usage are effective in getting heavy uses to cut down but then light users increase their usage.