In lactating mammary gland, protein B (α-lactalbumin) stimulated by prolactin, forms a complex with protein A, changing the specificity of that transferase so that lactose, rather than N-acetyllactosamine, is produced.