Social Psychology- Social Psychologists investigate how an individual’s behaviour can alter from belonging to a group. It examines how individuals relate to each other and the processes that pass between them.

Individual Differences- In this approach psychologists are interested in the way people differ and how those differences can be measured and so comparisons can be made.