Closing sentence | Keratoprosthesis replaces a diseased cornea with an artificial one, generally used with patients who have a history of multiple failed PKs. It is a generally successful operation; however it is quite expensive so is not as widely used as hopefully one day it will be.

Reference List

