- Following the marriage came a lull in the tensions between colonists and the Powhatans (the “Peace of Pocahontas”)
- Pocahontas, known as “Lady Rebecca Rolfe”, gave birth to a son, Thomas, a year after her marriage
- The Rolfs traveled to England in 1616 on a trip funded by the Virginia Company of London; there, Pocahontas was accompanied by about a dozen Powhatan men and women
  - After touring the country and meeting King James I and Queen Anne, the Rolfs settled in rural Brentford where Pocahontas saw John Smith again
    - The encounter was emotional and presumably tense, as Pocahontas reportedly reprimanded Smith for his treatment of her people
- In 1617, the Rolfs prepared to return to Virginia; upon traveling down the Thames River, Pocahontas was seriously ill and died of an unspecified illness in the town of Gravesend at about twenty-one years old
  - John Rolfe returned to Virginia soon after his late wife’s burial, leaving young Thomas with relatives in England
- Powhatan died less than a year later, the “Peace of Pocahontas” came to a bitter end as conflict resurfaced between her people and colonists