despite being a strong Keynesian, Sweden still emphasizes on supply side issues of the economy. For instance, it heavily subsidizes health, education and research and development to ensure that productivity of the microeconomic sector of the economy remain viable overall. So interestingly as per the Keynesian component of Government expenditure in the function of Aggregate demand, the government expenditure is mostly used to manipulate the supply side of the economy.