Another weakness of Social Learning theory is that there are issues with causality. It is not always clear whether someone who commits crimes has been influenced by bad role models within their peer group (as Social Learning Theory would suggest) or whether they already had a criminal intent which causes them to seek out a peer group with similar intentions. We can’t always be sure if behavior is the result of learning through observation.