Introspection was introduced by Wilhelm Wundt (The Father of psychology). It is a method used to investigate the structure of the human mind. Introspection is a reflection process, which can be used to analyse one’s own thought processes including feelings, emotions and sensations. Once verbalised, these thoughts can be analysed for patterns and trends so that theories can be made.