

husband] is able to understand what it is like for me to be this way.” Andrea believes that every disabled person deserves an equal voice, equal opportunities and equal rights. It is common sense, is it not, that equality is the only way for everyone to feel accepted? Andrea has formally stated that too many disabled people are made to feel excluded from society simply because they are unable to do everything that a healthy individual can do.

She is truly an inspiration, despite what she has faced throughout her life; Dworkin has managed to remain focused and has used her disability for the benefit of others like her, by raising awareness of the needs of the disabled and remaining positive.

Dworkin talks of her struggles in order to prove that although life is hard and it can test each and every one of us, things can and do get better. Andrea looks through the pain and finds unique ways to cope with the hardships in her life, listening to music as a way of therapy. “It keeps me calm and eases my pain in the night; it helps to think that with the amount of bad luck I’ve experienced in life, I must be due some good luck, right?”
