

England. But later when he went to South Africa, he saw beautiful handwritings of his fellow layers and thus was ashamed to show his notes. He wants that every young man and women must understand that good handwriting is a necessary part of education.

When he was in fourth standard, english became the medium of instruction in most subjects. He was dumbstruck. Also two new subjects appeared which were Geometry and Sanskrit. He disliked both of them. As he passed by, he witnessed the utter simplicity of Geometry and realised that it only required a pure and simple use of one's reasoning powers. Ever since he found Geometry both easy and interesting.

Sanskrit however was a different story altogether. It was much harder as he thought in Sanskrit everything had to be learnt by heart. As soon as he entered the sixth he became disheartened.
