

personality. Moreover the rivals state that a person who is convicted of crime is not able to choose a right person because he or she is politically immature. There the argument can be that the citizens who are not aware of politics or politically immature should also have not right to vote. The solution is that prisoners should be politically qualified in the prisons so that they might be able to choose the better leader. This will make them responsible and might help them in moving towards a better life.

Voting is the democratic right of prisoners. Democracy is a type of government in which each and every person has right to express his thoughts openly. Every person has freedom of choice. To give voting right to every citizen is the basic principle of democracy. Prisoners are also counted as citizens of the state according to this they also have right to vote. If the prisoners are not allowed to vote because they are criminal minded. Then, why a person who commits a crime and release after punishment is allowed to elect leaders for our future. As, they are also criminal minded because they had also been criminals. If it is the basic principle of democracy that everyone has right to vote then why in a democratic country prisoners are not allowed to vote?

Summarizing the whole talk, I think prisoners should be given the right to vote. Not all the prisoners but those who are incarcerated because of minor crimes. The prisoners should be placed into two categories, one who committed major crimes and others with minor crimes. All the prisoners should be rehabilitate in prisons but only those with minor crimes should be allowed to vote. Secondly, all the prisoners are not criminals few prisoners are blameless but waiting for the decision of court. All the arguments of a person against prisoners voting right can be denied in a single sentence that “Vote is the basic right of every person in a democratic society.” The right to vote is a right that according to law is entitled to every adult. Prisoners are no exception because they also fall in the society and do engage in a democratic process. All in all, Prisoners should be given a second chance to reform themselves. And giving them the voting right can help them in their rehabilitation. They might become good citizens.
