

What is the importance of teaching children writing at an early age and how can this talent be encouraged in the child?

Children's writing is not words and ornate letters, nor is it an elaborate structural expression. The word is a message, an issue, and then an art. It is a message because it contains educational, moral and educational content, and it is an issue because it is committed to principles, standards, values and art because the word has the wonderful ability to rephrase reality in a magical atmosphere full of imagination. For young children, life is a long story woven into small stories that get smaller and smaller as we get closer to the center point. When the children become older, they do not forget all of this, but are trapped in the depths of their souls and memories until the time comes for them either by word or by writing.

And as a person needs food and water to live, he needs the word that gives him the meaning of life, and the child is not only a healthy body and body good nutrition, but is also in need of whispering in his ears and nourishes his feelings with effective words and beautiful. And provides him with areas of knowledge, entertainment and entertainment, the child is a small person who has the desire to know the secrets of the world and its symbols.

It is very important that there be a variety of literary writings related to the culture of the child in order to develop the world of childhood mentally, skillfully, emotionally, morally, and entertainment, and this can only be through various means of communication such as essay, Investigative journalism, myth, story, poetry, theater. All of these elements that form the general concept of writing for a child are almost non-existent in the cultural milieu because we do not have a specialized child journalism.

And can be encouraged to read stories, novels and plays on him and ask him to list them in an interactive way and here can weave things of his imagination may not be present in the stories. Thus he has the ability to write.
