

The advantages and disadvantages of free Healthcare

Universal Healthcare or Free healthcare is a concept that provides everyone the opportunity for good health regardless of their economic or social status. People without any fear of costs on medical services can have benefits of Universal Healthcare. Although the idea might be popular, many patients fail to leverage this service efficiently. Age, household income, and personal circumstances play a deciding role in the eligibility for free healthcare. Acknowledging the advantages and disadvantages of free Healthcare is what you should do before applying for the service.

As advantages of free Healthcare, the universal healthcare might be for you if you are tired of feeling like your money is drained by healthcare system. There are still programs to help those who can't afford it get their basic needs met. Furthermore, if you meet specific qualifications, you can save more on the chronic treatment of diseases through Universal Healthcare. the following are some advantages of free Healthcare services in USA:

Firstly, When you have free health care, the government pays for your medical bills. This makes it cheaper because private companies don't have to come in and offer their services, this named low cost. Secondly, The main advantage of free Healthcare is that It helps the economy because there is less money spent on Healthcare and more people working in other, profitable industries where they can produce goods or services needed by society.

In other ways, free healthcare can be problematic for some people, especially when with non-chronic diseases. the other disadvantages of free Healthcare are also worth mentioning. Firstly, there are increasingly too many patients receiving low-quality care because of overcrowding. Since the Universal healthcare service is free for everyone, many patients also have to go through long waiting hours. In addition, medical personnel have to work under pressure to tend to every patient. This makes them more focused on prescribing more patients rather than examining each more closely.

To sum up, the governments go in favour of making medicines accessible for all through Universal healthcare, but the private healthcare system still has a different opinion about it.
