

Strategy for college-level writing

First of all, make sure you understood the requirement of the assignment. Start writing with a simple outline. If you are confused about your topic ask your instructor for clarification. Be precise on your topic, it should be meaningful and appropriate. You can research the topic and gather facts but don't forget to cite the work. Try to write it in your own words so that plagiarism can be avoided. the last and final step is proofread, after finishing the writing take a break and recheck your writing this will help you to find the mistake accurately.

writing a paper vs writing a discussion post

There is some difference between these two topics writing a paper is like you are expected to do a lot of writings by analyzing your topic and also it will be having many sections. when writing a paper you just tell people what you think or what you believe and also what is your stand on the specific topic, when writing a paper you are looking at your perception only. whereas writing a discussion post is like sharing your opinion and believes with other members in the discussion group while they share their opinion or requesting them to believe back in return.

These are the steps followed when writing a discussion post:

- * Outline your topic.
- * Make a summary of the topic.
- * Be concise, the answer should be appropriate and meaningful.
- * Should stick to the topic.
- * Need to cite the resource if any used.

steps followed when writing a paper:

- * Prepare the contents that you need to accomplish in your paper.
- * Note down what you know already about this topic.
- * Research your topic.
- * Revise it and make it better.

Writing an initial discussion post means, conveying your opinion on a specific topic, and responding to a classmate means giving feedback and suggestions on their post from our point of view.
