

THE DONKEY TRAPED ON HIS OWN TRICK

Once a miller had a donkey, on him, he used to carry salt to the town. There lay a stream on the way. The miller and the donkey had to cross it daily. One day when they were in the middle of the stream, the donkey slipped as the load was very heavy. He could not stand up at once. After sometime, much of the salt was washed off. However, the miller made his donkey stand. To his surprise the donkey found the burden very light. He became very happy. The next day, when they were passing through stream, the donkey slipped intentionally. He kept sitting in the water until a good deal of the salt washed off. The miller saw through the trick of the donkey. He decided to teach him a lesson. On the third day, he loaded him with a bale of cotton. The donkey as usual sat in the water. Finally, he tried to stand, to his shock; he found that the load had multiplied. However, the