

OB at Individual Level

- Characteristics of individuals (such as personality, feeling, and motivation) affect how well people do their jobs.
- whether they like what they do, whether they get along with the people they work with, and so on.
- personality and ability; attitudes, values, and moods; perception and attribution; learning; motivation; and stress and work-life linkages

Its Relations to Other Disciplines

- Various disciplines exist within the field of behavioral sciences, especially:
 - Psychology-deals with personality systems and people's actions. Its aim is understand, predict and control behavior. Subfields are experimental, development and industrial psychology.
 - Sociology- deals with social group behaviors and social processes. The units of study in sociology are societies, organizations, groups.
 - Social-Psychology- deals with the socialization process of human being.
 - Anthropology- deals with the cultural roots of societies.

Organizational Behavior

- One of the subfields of behavioral sciences is organizational behavior that is related to also managerial sciences.