

Christmas Presents P1 Q5

On the twenty- fifth of December snow made its way down like a duvet from the glorious heavens. Every small snowflake was a breadcrumb compared to the magnificent shopping cart of the snow. The snowflakes paraglided down in swarms of mosquitoes, pouncing upon every grass blade, stinging like a bee. Trillions of snowflakes blocked any natural sunlight from entering the earth's atmosphere. No flowers or plants stood tall anymore, they were flattened by the huge bulldozers the snowflakes were.

Within the gargantuan mansion covered in snow, from head to toe, every room was decorated just like a chocolate cake, with an odour from heaven being the cherry on top. The window was covered with golden decorative lights, which sparkled like a house covered in a glitter bomb. The tall pine tree staring down upon our house, was decorated with long lights which twirled around it of blue colour. It was like you were looking through a magnifying glass at a normal christmas tree; however, it was not.

Inside sat a tall large mountain which was covered in green leaves. Off the leaves hung many luminous lights which transformed the night into day. They hung off like butterflies gently taking a nap on a leaf. The lights had tied knots all around the christmas tree. The long wires covered in lights were just like platelet cells bonding together to cover a scab, getting the overall product to the perfection required. The christmas tree had been decorated over the previous days and was a statue of ornaments. It was like it was standing in a museum filled with ancient treasures.

Beneath the tree sat millions of small boxes containing christmas presents, wrapped together with festive wrapping paper. The wrapping paper encased large items of incredible value. To hold the package together multiple coloured ribbons wrapped around the packages with bow ties at the end. One christmas present was decorated lavishly with snowmen dressed in black scarfs and carrot noses embroidered on the side of the package. It also had golden glitter sitting on leaf tops. The ribbon at the top was of royal red colour in bow like shape.

The Snowman present would bring happiness and joy to the wonderful recipient of the item. They unwrap the present by pulling off the ribbon, then layer by layer they take off the skin like a snake shredding: until, finally they receive the item they have been dreaming for, for the last whole year. The next present in line also has their name, they rip off the ribbon, then layer by layer they reveal what is inside. A brand new cricket bag reveals itself. Gray Nicolls embroidered on the side. A large bag. What more could you ask for?
