

- The disc and washer method can be used to find the volume of objects that are not entirely made up of discs or washers.
- For example, the volume of a solid with a hole in the middle, such as a donut or a pipe, can be found using the washer method by subtracting the volume of the hole from the volume of the solid.

- The washer method can also be used to find the volume of a region that is bounded by two curves.