IELTS stands for international English language testing system. In this test, all they do is check your proficiency by means of non-native speakers. This test has been created by Cambridge University a long time ago. 80 percent of the English used in the UK has a British accent. There are three different things that you have to notice or three different types in IELTS. Some of them are very important to take care of, some of them are okay, you know you're fine with it, some of the things you can be cautious about or you're fine. There are types and categories that are very important, but for now let's start watching British accent movies, okay. Solve that problem later. There are four modules in IELTS: listening, reading, writing, and speaking. If in any of these you score less compared to the requirement, so for an example, I'm a company who wants to hire someone from India, I'm staying in the US. There's nothing like marks or anything like that, we have bands, these are the final ones now, what is the meaning of these bands?

There are four modules in these we have 10 questions in both of them which are similarities and one point you get for one correct answer so you get 40 out of 40 right so this will be nine bands. One correct answer, one point is one point and hence 40 points you get from 40 whatever you get based on that you get. There are four criteria for writing and speaking and based on these criteria they test you and provide you points now I'll give you an example of each, you know one of the criteria. The better vocabulary you use in writing, the highest score you get in writing. There are total four criteria in speaking, one of them is fluency. There is no set requirement, you can write as many times as you want but I won't recommend it going to it immediately. General Training tests are less compared to Academic because it's only written two times a month. Academic is conducted 48 times a year for the time 48 times a year however General Training is conducted 24 times a year.

Reading, listening, and writing IELTS test will take place on 25th of July then probably my speaking test will be anything between 20 to 25 or 26 to 30. Total time will be 2 hours and 45 minutes for the whole test. The sequence is always the same which I'm showing you so listening comes first then comes reading and writing. You have to understand and write detailed will be in coming sessions this is just a mini introduction right for you to understand now once you write all the tests that is speaking after 13 days you will get your score and it will be online. You will get a registration
