

Pakistan Economic Crisis - Pakistan's internal problem with Taliban |

Pakistan has a long and complicated history with Afghanistan. What is important to us is that last year, Taliban did 262 attacks on Pakistan. We are talking about the Tehiktaliban, which is an extremist organization that has become a big headache for Pakistan. Pakistan was happy with the Taliban after all, Pakistani Army had trained them in the past. Literally, Taliban means "student." Afghanistan was the only country to vote against Pakistan when it became a member of the United Nations in 1947. Afghanistan wanted Pakistan to stop and Pakistan from joining the United Nations. To understand today's conflict between Pakistan and Afghanistan, we need to rewind a bit. It has its roots in colonization in 1830, when British were growing their empire in India and Pakistan, while the rest of Asia was imperialist Russia's territory to be captured and controlled. The British fought 4 wars and they lost all of them. Pakistan is in big trouble today. Balochistan people want to separate themselves from Pakistan and from Afghanistan's side; they are attacking Pakistan. TTP (Tehrik-e-Taliban Pakistan) wants to establish an Islamic State in Pakistan, overthrow Pakistani government, and establish their caliphate in Fata, which is also known as Talibanland. Pakistan is going through a big economic crisis.
