

before women typically know that they 're pregnant. The chorion is associated with Cori on this leads to the entrance of blood vessels feeding the gastrula. Even in a human embryo you would see these little little Holdings looking like they could become gills they do n't because we 're human but this is one of those as far as we know vestigial structures kind of leftover remnants from ancestors in the ocean from hundred years ago. A week eight embryo about two months into the process. The size of a week 8 embryo about that big this is typically before a woman is showing before you could obviously know that she is pregnant. You can see a very early umbilical cord and how it enters into the the body.
