

budgeting interesting, there had never been a moment where I was bored watching it. Their performance on the stage is not only interesting but also gives us a morale lesson. The way they also present it is very creative, like the way they compared money to love and said that both will be gone when you become careless. I like the play very much because I can relate with the protagonist. I, too, have saving troubles. When I start buying, I find it hard to stop because there are so many I want to have and I just have the right money for it. But watching the play taught me to prioritize first my needs before my wants because, as they said, regrets will always be at the end. I also learned the importance of saving and budgeting money when Gwyneth's money isn't enough to pay for her application fee and when Lolo Sally had the money to pay for Gwyneth's father's hospital fee. Everyone helped the protagonist to understand and learn how to save and budget her money and that is very nice to see. In the end, the things that are most important, are the things that we can't buy.
