

These indicate no major barriers to communication. It also suggest you are happy, you are not worried

Hand on face - A hand over one's mouth is a closed gesture. Leaning on one's elbow with the chin in the hand can communicate boredom.

It also indicates sadness of his life.

Head motion:

Head up suggests self-confidence, honour, self-respect. Head down suggests guilt, modesty etc. When speakers speak with pride, they moves their head up.

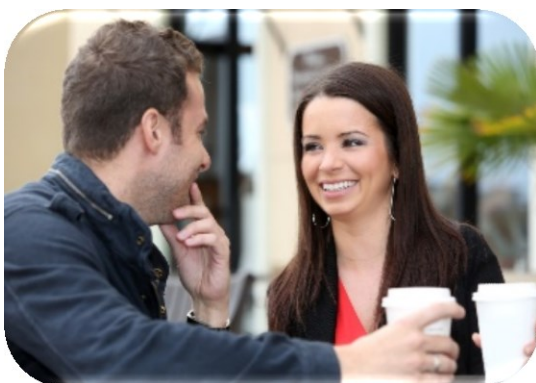

Facial Expression

Face says many things, you can come to know about hidden feeling of anger, fear, confusion, uncertainty, enthusiasm and joy will get revealed by the facial expression. Sometimes, the words that you utter may be contradicted by your facial expression. Smiling suggests a very positive sign. It signals a warm personal relationship.

Eye Contact:

Speaker and listener should not only face each other but also maintain correct eye contact. It suggests that speaker has confidence, interest and honesty, it also suggests that whatever he speaks, he believes in it. If someone avoids direct eye contact, he is suspected to be sly or cunning. In eastern countries, subordinates or younger people may avoid direct eye contact out of respect or deference.

Cultural Difference

China: Space is much less important in China. When conversing, Chinese will stand extremely close to the one to whom they are speaking. One to two feet is a common distance. When meeting a stranger, the distance would be farther. Although Chinese have a very small personal space, they do not like to be touched within their space.

Iraqi: Between members of the same sex, a distance of about 1 foot to an arm's length is common. More touching is common, and walking hand in hand with members of the same sex is normal. Not touching during a conversation may convey dislike.

USA: People keep more open space between themselves and their conversation partners
