

- The adoption of psychoanalysis of a dynamic conception of mental processes and the consideration of psychic topology.
- The complexity of transposing a psychic act from an unconscious system to a conscious or preconscious one.
- Research focused on regions of the psychic apparatus regardless of their anatomical location.
- Possible explanations for the transposition of psychic acts between systems.
- Repression as a process that affects representations on the border between the unconscious and preconscious systems.
- The metapsychological description of the process of repression in known transference neuroses.
- The particular properties of the lcc system, including its timelessness and its pursuit of the pleasure principle.
- The comparison between the lcc and Prcc systems.
- The predominance of the reference to the word over the reference to the thing in schizophrenia.
- The decomposition of the conscious-representation into word-representation and thing-representation.
- The need for reinforcement of new qualities in order for representations to become conscious.
- The turning away from our genuine subject to the problems of the preconscious and the conscious.

Preview from Notesale.co.uk
Page 4 of 4