

support from their own government and their leaders. This resulted in them feeling they had to do something drastic, trying to make a change.

Lobbying is a big concern for the protesters. Occupy Wall Street says that they are angry that the big Wall Street banks "have donated large sums of money to politicians, who are responsible for regulating them." way too much influence and power over the federal government.

Also there is no economic support for students seeking a higher education. They're drowning in debt. Student debt has become a focus for the Occupy movement. Student loan debt has been rising drastically, and college students in the last couple of years are entering one of the worst job markets in a generation

So to sum it all up, it's mainly about money, and the big gap between the rich and the poor.

Preview from Notesale.co.uk
Page 3 of 3