

|                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                      |                    |                                         |                                                                                                         |
|----------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------|--------------------|-----------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 750-57    | The children were freezing and starvingMr Brocklehurst explains to Miss Temple that the deprivation is character building and that the girls must all be the same (cut off curls)Jane drops her slate and is forced to stand on a chair and be ignored the rest of the day | Jane EyreMiss TempleMr Brocklehurst          | Lowood             | Deprivation, humiliation, embarrassment | 'Naturally! Yes, but we are not to conform to nature' mr brocklehurst                                   |
| 857-64    | Helen and Miss Temple comfort Jane                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | Jane EyreMiss TempleHelen Burns              | Lowood             | Friendship, trust                       |                                                                                                         |
| 964-71    | Helen was illHelen dies in her sleep next to Jane                                                                                                                                                                                                                              | Jane EyreHelen Burns                             | Lowood             | Lost, grief, emptiness                  |                                                                                                         |
| 1071-80   | The impact of Typhus fever drew attention to Lowood & money was donated to improve the schooling conditionsJane is a teacher at Lowood but seeks something newShe receives a letter from Thornfield in response to a new job and she accepts itBessie pays her a visit | Jane EyreBessie                                  | Lowood             | Hope, new beginnings                    | 'I tired of the routine of eight years in one afternoon. I desired liberty...'                          |
| 1180-93   | Jane meets Mrs Fairfax who treats her well surprisinglyShe meets Adela and learns of Mr Rochester                                                                                                                                                                              | Jane EyreMrs FairfaxAdelaGrace Poole (?) | Thornfield         | Relief,                                 | 'I rose; I dressed myself with care: obliged to be plain'                                               |
| 1294-102  | Jane takes a walk and finds Mr Rochester and his horse fallen over so she helps Mr Rochester, as he sprains his ankle then pays a visit to Thornfield                                                                                                                              | Mr RochesterJane EyreMrs Fairfax             | Thornfield/outside | Help, kindness                          |                                                                                                         |
| 13103-112 | Adele stops concentrating as she wants to see Mr Rochester                                                                                                                                                                                                                         | Jane EyreAdeleRochester                      | Thornfield         |                                         | 'No wonder you have rather the look of another world. I marvelled where you had got that sort of face.' |

|                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |                                                                                          |                              |                              |  |
|---------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------|------------------------------|--|
|                                 | Rochester takes Jane to Mr Mason who has passed out from blood loss Jane is locked in the room, terrified of the women in the next room (Grace etc) He was bitten They then go for a walk                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                          |                              |                              |  |
| 21 193-212 | Lately, Jane's been having strange nightmares about a baby. Every night for a week, she's played with this weird baby in her dreams Jane is visited by Robert Leaven, Mr. Reed's coachman, who married Bessie. Robert tells Jane that John Reed is dead, possibly by suicide because of his gambling debts, and that Mrs. Reed had a stroke when she heard. On her deathbed, Mrs. Reed has been asking to see Jane. Rochester agrees and offers her £50 Jane gets her to explain why she always hated her niece. Apparently, Jane's mother was Mr. Reed's sister, and when the family disowned her for marrying a man of low status, Mr. Reed defended her. Mr. Reed was always attached to his sister and her child, Jane Eyre, and Mrs. Reed seems to have been jealous. Georgiana talks to Jane more As she's dying, Mrs. Reed apologises to Jane for two things: for not treating her like a daughter, for concealing a letter from Jane's uncle, John | Jane Bessie Rochester Mrs Reed Eliza Georgiana | Thornfield/ Reed home | Dr. apologies, family |  |