

|                                                                                               |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                               | exports so won't want a high exchange rate – can use extra money from higher export rate if low exchange rate to import more <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• EFFECT ON EFFICIENCY</li> <li>• Domestic markets now face more competition, leads to them being more efficient – (Perfect competition efficient, monopoly inefficient)</li> </ul>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| EVALUATION OF EXCHANGE RATES DEGREE OF CERTAINTY FOR STAKEHOLDERS | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• FIXED EXCHANGE RATE</li> <li>• High degree of certainty for firms consumer and government as they will know what it will be in the future</li> <li>• Firms - Can plan future investments both domestically and abroad, predict costs of imports and future sales</li> <li>• Consumers – Better plan travelling abroad, purchasing of imported goods and services and financial investments abroad</li> <li>• Governments – Similarly can plan activities involving foreign transactions</li> <li>• Speculation is limited, removes a cause of currency instability</li> <li>• Increase confidence</li> <li>• FLOATING EXCHANGE RATE</li> <li>• Can cause uncertainty as stakeholders are unsure of value in the future</li> <li>• Firms - Negative effects on trade and investment due to inability to plan for the future</li> <li>• Consumers – Inability to plan</li> <li>• Government – Large and abrupt exchange rate changes can cause problems for countries that depend heavily on exports. Can result in financial crises due to large current account deficits</li> <li>• Currency speculation can be destabilising</li> </ul> |
| ROLE OF FOREIGN CURRENCY RESERVES                                               | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• FIXED EXCHANGE RATE</li> <li>• Central bank intervention to maintain a fixed exchange rate requires high supply of foreign currency reserves</li> <li>• Problems can arise if not sufficient foreign reserves</li> <li>• FLOATING EXCHANGE RATE</li> <li>• No need for foreign reserves</li> <li>• Balance of payments balance through market forces</li> </ul>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| EASE OF ADJUSTMENT                                                              | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• FIXED EXCHANGE RATE</li> <li>• No easy methods to fix imbalances in balance of payments</li> <li>• External shocks e.g. sudden increase in oil prices leading to current account deficits can't be handled quickly</li> <li>• Persistent current account deficits require foreign currency reserves or access to foreign borrowing.</li> <li>• If these are unavailable country must resort to contractionary policies, trade protection or exchange controls, all with serious negative</li> </ul>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

|                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| TRADE DIVERSION                              | Where the creation of a trading bloc moves the production of a good or service from a low cost producer to a high cost producer                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| SINGLE CURRENCIESSINGLE CURRENCY | Where a number of countries all use the same currency and have a single central bank                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| ADVANTAGES OF A SINGLE CURRENCY              | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• No transaction costs (Costs involved in converting currency), therefore trade more competitive within Eurozone, keeps money within the trading bloc</li> <li>• Buying decisions are easier, increases information to buyers as prices will all be in Euros, more efficient</li> <li>• Increased confidence in trade, more likely to conduct long term agreements in Euros as price won't fluctuate</li> <li>• Increased confidence will increase investment</li> <li>• Shared, single currency should have more strength than individual country's currency</li> </ul>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| DISADVANTAGES OF A SINGLE CURRENCY           | Currency appreciates and depreciates according to all countries, not individual, can't let currency sort itself out naturally to achieve macro objectives, economies aren't the same <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Can't purposefully manipulate currency to benefit imports/exports</li> <li>• Single central bank means can't control interest rates or supply of money – no macro power</li> <li>• European countries can't quantitative ease without agreement of ECB, and German's have huge fear of hyperinflation</li> <li>• Also menu costs of moving to a new currency, e.g. printing new money and initial concern and uncertainty over what things cost</li> </ul> Overall: More likely to be successful if economies are converging so objectives will overlap, Eurozone has a lot of diverging economies |
| TERMS OF TRADETERMS OF TRADE     | Analyses the relationship between a countries import prices and export prices. It analyses how many imports a country can buy with a given quantity of a country's exports                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |